Last words: Peggy is taking a break

Our columnist At-Large in Ballard, Peggy Sturdivant, is going on sabbatical. For the summer. You will miss her, I told her. Peggy has her feet on the ground like no one else who has ever written for this paper. Her writing is always passionate, informed and wrapped up nicely. But she needs time off from the rigors of weekly column writing.

Peggy recognizes that people's lives do not stop at Ballard's borders. When she returns, rested, hopefully, she is likely to turn her sharp eye (and ear...she has a sharp ear, too) toward regional topics. Send her a note. Tell her you are a fan.

Lynn Dennis guides the West Seattle Chamber of Commerce full steam ahead

By Lindsay Peyton

Lynn Dennis knows how business works on all levels, in companies big and small.

She understands the mechanics of running a small family business, because she worked alongside her parents, sister and husband at KMD, Inc. for 15 years. She has also worked in large corporations, like Harbor Properties, which developed major real estate in the city.

Dennis' background prepared her for her current post as CEO of the West Seattle Chamber of Commerce, where she has gained a reputation as a passionate leader.

"She exemplifies women in leadership; she's the whole package," Patricia Throop, vice chair of the Chamber's board and founder of Eldercare Consulting, said.

Throop said Dennis has pushed the organization ahead. "We've been so lucky to get Lynn on the Chamber," Throop said. "She really took the bull by the horns. She's been so phenomenal at getting the board organized and helping define our vision."

Throop said Dennis is a well-known figure in West Seattle.

"Her skill is being able to say, 'I hear your needs and here are solutions and people who can help you,'" Throop said. "She gets to know you so she can be more resourceful. She's a kind, warm, sensitive person—who also knows how to get the job done."

Chamber chair Paul Prentice said the group is glad to have Dennis on board. "We made the best choice we could," he said. "She's been on top of the inner workings of the Chamber. She has a great organizational mind, and she's a great administrator."

Originally from South Carolina, Dennis grew up in small town with a large family. "I had the most unbelievable support system," she said.

Dennis moved with her parents to Atlanta at age 16. She explained that the high school she attended there ranked in the top four for scholastics in the nation, while the school she left behind ranked in the bottom four.

"I was tutored before, after and during school," she said. "I'm not one of those people that things come to easy. I had to work hard."

Learning the value of hard work at a young age, however, paid off for Dennis.

She took her first internship at a law firm in downtown Atlanta while still in high school. All of the other interns were college students. The next summer, she took a job at a family law firm.

Then Dennis attended Clemson University, where she obtained her bachelor's degree in business administration.

Her next job was at an advertising firm in Atlanta, and she enjoyed diving into her clients' companies to learn about their industries and better understand their markets.

"Then my parents called me," she said.

They had moved to Seattle to start a transportation and distribution company—and asked Dennis to come on board with the new family business.

"They started with two trucks," Dennis said.

The family grew the business to a full fleet with offices in three cities. Dennis also met her now husband Jerry on the job.

Next, Dennis was hired at Manage, Inc to help clients with databases, hardware installations and software development and training. She stayed there for three years until transitioning to the staff of one of the company's clients, Harbor Properties.

The real estate development and management firm needed technical assistance and Dennis was up for the challenge.

She streamlined operations by implementing a whole new software and hardware system to operate both the commercial and residential sides of the business. She later worked for the company as director of strategic planning and training.

Lindsay Peyton

Lynn Dennis draws from a wide range of experiences and a broad base of business knowledge in her role as CEO of the West Seattle Chamber of Commerce.

"I was able to work with people at the top of the industry," she said. "I've been blessed to work with the best of the best."

At this post, she helped bring Mural and LINK Apartments to West Seattle.

"I walked up and down California Ave, from Morgan to Alki," she said. "I asked everyone, 'What commercial spaces need to be here? What businesses do you want to have in the neighborhood?'"

When Harbor Properties closed in 2012, Dennis responded to a request from a friend, asking her to help the West Seattle Chamber with some organization.

The temporary assignment turned into a full time job when she was hired as CEO two years later.

"I have always been the person behind the person, making them look good," Dennis said. "That was my niche. And in a sense, that's what I'm still doing today."

She simply wants to support the board of directors and build a thriving business community in West Seattle, she explained.

"It's all about how we make this a better place," she said.

Dennis believes the key to success is being a good listener. "What I do here is listen and connect," she said.

She is also a leader for Weight Watchers—and enjoys helping members become healthier and more confident.

"We spend a lot of time focusing on our weaknesses in life," she said. "When I realized you could take a person's strengths and expand on that, it's the difference between day and night."

With Weight Watchers and the Chamber, Dennis said her goal is to help individuals succeed and thrive.

"I love the people," she said. "There's nothing I wouldn't do for any of them."

AmazonFresh Pickup opens in Ballard after months of beta testing

By Shane Harms

Ballardites are finding a new way to buy groceries after the new AmazonFresh Pickup grocery location at 5100 15th Ave. N.W. opened last week.

The store allows for Amazon members to order their groceries lists online or via app, and Amazon employees will pack them up at pickup locations. Within 15 minutes Amazon Prime members can pick up their order.

"I love this. It's so easy," said Ned, 30. Ned said he came from Fremont to get his goods.

Stacey, 24, arrived at the pickup site on a bicycle. She had a backpack and was going in to get her order.

"Having all the items set aside for me and ready to go is pretty rad. I'd be walking around the store looking for stuff and scaring people otherwise."

The store is one of two AmazonFresh Pickup locations—another in SODO—and both are a part of a pilot program.

AmazonFresh Pickup is offered free to Prime members. One feature Amazon uses to maximize efficiency is scanning customers' license plates when they arrive in order to coordinate orders. After placing an order, customers drive up to the site and park. They are identified, and an attendant confirms the order. Then a short time later the groceries are delivered to the customer and even placed in the vehicle. No need to sign anything. Packaging is much like what a customer would encounter in a grocery store with paper sacks and smaller plastic bags for produce.

The tech giant announced the program was in a beta testing phase at the end of last March, however up until then what was being built at the site where Louie's Chinese Cuisine used to reside was a mystery; Amazon made no announcements until March and did not respond to Ballard News-Tribune (or other publications') inquiries in August as the site in Ballard was being constructed.

The Amazon stores are something the Seattle Times' called a "multipronged approach to unraveling the mystery of profitably selling groceries in the digital age."

Back in April, the Ballard News-Tribune asked Ballardites how they felt about the new store opening in Ballard. Some said that the new store format is an example of e-commerce manifesting in the physical world and the demise of brick and mortar grocery stores. However, more recently, interviewing people near the pick-up location, there were more positive views as customers adjust to an emerging trade in grocery shopping.

Injured 'Deadliest Catch' fishermen awarded $1.35 million

By Shane Harms

After a firework explosion left "Deadliest Catch" fishermen David "Beaver" Zielinski maimed aboard the vessel Time Bandit, King County awarded the fishermen $1.35 million, concluding over two years of litigation.

An episode of the Discovery Channel's fishing show revealed a firework accidentally blowing up in its launcher Zielinski was holding. The injuries were traumatic and led to multiple surgeries to reconstruct the hand. The incident occurred on Hillstrand brothers' crab boat amid the Bering Sea during snow crab season. The firework was a Time Bandit-brand.

Unable to fish anymore, Zielinski sued the Hillstrand companies two years ago in King County Superior Court. The case went to trial May 1 and last Tuesday a jury returned a verdict awarding Zielinski the sum. King County Superior Court Judge Jeffrey Ramsdell oversaw the trial. The jury original determined Zielinski should be awarded $2.7, but it was later reduced because Zielinski was found to be partially responsible for the injuries.

Steven Gibbons, Zielinski attorney, said that an appeal of the order would likely be in order from both sides.

Police searching for man who attacked woman at Highline High

By Lindsay Peyton

A dog's growl was enough warning to get its owner to stop casually chatting with a stranger.

At 8 p.m. on Fri., May 5, a woman was out walking her canine companion at Highline High School, 225 S. 152nd St. The campus was busy. A sporting event had just ended and the attendees were piling out of the game and starting to leave the area.

When a man approached her and asked her how to get to the game, she simply gave him directions. He walked away, stood by a tree for a couple of minutes and then returned and tried to pet the dog.

The dog responded with a growl—and the woman picked up her dog and started running away.

The man chased after her, eventually catching up to her and wrapping his arm around her neck, choking her. She struggled to breathe.

Eventually, the victim was able to run away and made it back to her home. She sustained a fractured jaw during the struggle.

She met with police 20 minutes later — and described the man as in his mid 20s, weighing about 180 pounds, with a medium build, brown eyes and short black hair. He wore a black jacket, blue jeans and black shoes. He told her that his name was Juan.

Sgt. Cindi West, spokeswoman for King

Sheriff Department sketch of "Juan."

County Sheriff's Office, said that the victim did the right thing by following her—and her dog's—instincts.

"As soon as she started to feel uncomfortable, she tried to leave," West said.

Officers are still searching for the man who assaulted this woman.

"A lot of crimes are solved by the people who recognize a suspect and call us to report it," West said. "Police can't see everything and be everywhere. So we rely on the community to help us. That's what we're hoping for in this case."

To help identify the suspect or to report any information pertaining to the case, call 911 or 206.296.3311.

Say goodbye to Glacier High School with a walk-through on June 17

Past students and former employees are invited to take one last walk through part of the old Glacier High School at 1 p.m. on Sat., June 17. The buildings will be demolished later this summer to make way for a new middle school opening September 2019.

Last November, voters approved a bond to build a new middle school on the district-owned Glacier site at 2450 S. 142nd St. in SeaTac. Building the new school means saying goodbye to the structure that housed Glacier High School from 1960 to 1980.

Many Glacier alumni have expressed fond memories of their years there, before the school was closed in 1980 due to decreasing enrollment and SeaTac airport expansion. An alumni group is planning an all-school reunion at Azteca in Burien on Sat., June 17. Alumni are invited to come and celebrate the school and its memories. Please contact Paula Verdi-King (Class of '72) to receive information about the reunion.

Mount Rainier High School Lead Custodian Guy Morford and Woodside Lead Custodian Richard Fisher, both Glacier graduates, have volunteered to lead a tour through the cafeteria, gym and administration building for those who would like to walk through as a group and spend a little time on site with other alumni between 1–3 p.m.

Hardly a trace of Glacier High School remains at the site because the buildings were later leased by a variety of organizations. Users included the Washington State Criminal Justice Training Center, the City of SeaTac Department of Public Works, and Central Washington University. The site served as the temporary home of Big Picture School. Sound Athletics rented the gym for a number of years.

Connect and share a memory

Let us know if you plan to attend the tour, or you may share a memory and your advice to future middle school students: RSVP and share a memory. If you have questions, contact Highline Communications Specialist Rose Eades or call 206.631.3002.

Community meeting

See the design concepts for the new middle school to be built at the Glacier site: Tues., June 6, 7–8 p.m. Hilltop Elementary School cafeteria, 12250 24th Ave. S., Burien

You are invited to see the progress on schematic designs by Integrus Architecture.

The future middle school will be located at the site of the former Glacier High School, 2450 S. 142nd St., SeaTac.

HIGHLINE LETTER

Marina needs repairs

To the editor:

I was disappointed in the May 19, 2017 article, "Bring a Buck in Your Bucket." I do not know who wrote this article, but before publishing such a negative and accusatory story, please do your research. Go to the Des Moines Marina website and read information on Paid Parking. Boaters have sustained our Marina with moorage fees and gas purchases for many years. Taxpayer money does not support our Marina. Revenue from the Marina has supported the City of Des Moines, with profits being transferred into the City's General Fund.

Now, the 50-year-old Marina is in need of many expensive repairs. Boaters cannot cover all the expenses, and we all know thousands of non-boaters enjoy Marina activities. We should all pitch in a few dollars to ensure this beautiful public venue doesn't go away.

Security will be improved with gates closing at 10 p.m., and reopening at 5 a.m. Police and residents witness too many activities not considered "family friendly" in the Marina parking lots after 10 p.m. They continue on until the morning hours.

Again, please read all the information posted on the Des Moines Marina website. After you know all the facts, re-read your own article. I hope you have a change of heart, because I feel the citizens who want to protect our Marina have huge hearts.

HEALTHY LIVING

VALUABLE TIPS FOR PERSONAL WELLNESS

Letting Go: Finding Movement & Peace in Pregnancy

By Teanna Gentry

For as long as I can remember I have been the type of person that loves control. Controlling what I put into my body for fuel, how I exercise and presenting myself to the world in a certain way has always been a focus of mine. This kind of control can be a good thing to a point, but not when it becomes something that I base my value off of as a person. When I found out I was pregnant the first time, truth be told several thoughts came into my mind....What if I can't work out like I used to? Will my clothes still look good on me as my body grows for the baby? Am I going to be a cute pregnant lady or one that waddles around with a look of disparity on their face? I know these are all negative thoughts that deal with self-esteem, self-worth, and whatever other "self" focused word you want to use, but I can imagine other women have felt this way too and that I am not alone. Pregnancy has taught me more about letting go of my need for control and realizing my own selfishness more than any other stage of my life. Daily I have had to call upon and remember the promises of my value and worth and practice presence.

I am loved, I am accepted, I am beautiful, I am enough.

Remembering and dwelling on these promises or mantras have been huge for me during my first and second pregnancy. Practicing yoga, or staying active and moving in general in pregnancy is not an easy thing. Getting myself to move in some way everyday has not only given me a place to let go and accept myself, but also has alleviated much of the physical stressors brought onto the body by growing a little human being.

Continuing to practice & move!

The biggest benefit of prenatal yoga or staying active in pregnancy is learning to let go! Going through pregnancy and its myriad of physical and hormonal changes can be exhausting. Natural worries may emerge about your baby's health, and the imminent transition to parenting can be stressful. There are so many reasons to practice prenatal yoga, and I have summarized some below.

Benefits specific to Prenatal Yoga

- Develops stamina and strength
- Balance
- Relieves tension in the lower back, hips, chest, neck, and shoulders
- Calms the nervous system
- Preparation for labor
- Connection with baby
- Increases circulation
- Breathwork practice

No matter where you are in your yoga practice or fitness level, pregnancy will change the way your body moves and responds activity. My favorite thing to remember is that my body was made to carry and birth a baby and that yoga is one way I have found that I can continue to move, breathe, and feel all of the changes my body is making on the mat.

Try this!

Warrior 2 strengthens the muscles that support your joints at the hips. This is particularly important during pregnancy, since relaxin—a pregnancy hormone that relaxes your connective tissue—makes your joints less stable. Plus, the powerful nature of the pose will encourage feelings of strength and confidence. Tip: Position your front leg so that your knee, second toe, and hip are in a line, which reduces pressure on your front knee.

Meditate!

Try breathing deeply in and out for a few minutes with your eyes closed. Send your breath to the baby that is growing inside you. Think about the journey you will have together as mother and child....become empowered, feel loved, and safe. Motherhood is another part of this beautiful life, and I am finding strength in it all for the journey ahead.

NEIGHBOR DISCOVERS BURGLARY WHILE WATCHING CATS

Seattle Police are investigating a burglary that occurred at a residence located on 10th Avenue N.W. on May 18. Police were dispatched to the address after a neighbor told them the house had been broken into. The complainant was watching over the cats while the owners of the house were away. While feeding the cats he noticed that there were doors opened and drawers pulled out of the dressers. He could not account for any valuables taken but noticed that the back window was opened and a back door was unlocked.

DISPUTE OVER VEHICLE ENDS WITH ASSAULT WITH MACHETE

Police are investigating after an assault involving a machete occurred on May 18 at the intersection of N. 35th Street and Interlake Avenue N. Police made contact with the victim who had a four-centimeter laceration on his elbow. Police say the cut went down to the bone. Before being rushed to the hospital the victim told police that a dispute arose with the suspect over the purchase of a vehicle. One party could not provide the title and wanted their money back. The suspect accused the victim of being a thief and came at him with a machete, striking him in the elbow. The victim was able to get inside a vehicle and protect himself, but the suspect pushed the blade through the window and told the victim he was going to kill him. The suspect fled the scene. Police were unable to locate the suspect or the machete, but the victim was able to provide his name. He said he had known the suspect for over a year.

WEST SEATTLE

CAR PROWLER CAUGHT IN THE ACT, ARRESTED

Around 12:20 a.m. on Wed., May 31, officers were dispatched to the 8800 block of 42nd Avenue S.W. in response to a report of a man testing car door handles to see if any vehicles had been left unlocked. As officers were arriving in the area, the call was updated. A witness observed the suspect getting into one of the parked cars and then walking away. Officers found a man matching the suspect description and detained him. The witness was able to positively identify the man as the same one seen entering the car. The owner of the car confirmed that items left in the console were missing. Police arrested the 37-year-old man and booked him into King County Jail.

BURGLARY OF HOME AND CAR ON FAUNTLEROY WAY S.W.

A man residing on the 5900 block of Fauntleroy Way S.W. woke up around 5 a.m. and went to his car parked outside. He immediately noticed it had been ransacked, as a number of items were scattered on the seats and the floor. He also saw a bag sitting in the front seat that he knew had been inside his apartment. He went back inside and realized a few things were missing. He searched the home and saw that someone had entered through an unlocked patio door while he was asleep. When he went back to his car, he found that the cell phone he had left outside was gone. The victim went back into his apartment and called the police. Officers searched for prints but were not able to find any.

BICYCLE THIEF

Officers received a call around 9 a.m. on Sat., May 20, reporting that a man on a bicycle was wrestling with a man on a moped near the intersection of 20th Avenue S.W. and S.W. Henderson Street. When police arrived, the suspect was gone. The victim explained that he lived in an RV, which is currently parked on S.W. Henderson Street. Earlier in the morning, he was sleeping inside, when his dog barked and woke him up. He heard someone trying to open the door handle of his RV. A few minutes later, he saw an unknown man riding away on his bicycle, which had been propped against the back of the RV. Later that morning, the victim saw the same man riding the stolen bicycle north in the alley. He told his friend about the crime, who then rode off on his moped to look for the thief. They found the man in front of his house, and they started wrestling. The thief got off the bike and started yelling at other witnesses from the block, who had gathered around. The victim took his bike back and the suspect started yelling at him and threatening witnesses. The suspect took cans out of his backpack and threw them around. He also grabbed a box-cutter and slashed the moped's tire. Witnesses saw the suspect walk around the corner and break two windows the victim's RV. The suspect finally walked away. Police checked the area for the man but were unable to find him. The man was described as being in his 30s, and wearing a blue shirt with a vertical stripe and gray sweatpants. He was carrying a black and green backpack. Officers took photos of the scene and the damaged RV windows and submitted the images to evidence.

Everyone's swimming to Seattle

JEAN GODDEN

Twenty years ago, Newsweek Magazine famously announced: "Everyone's swimming to Seattle." Pictured on the magazine cover was Washington, D.C., pundit Michael Kinsley, face to face with a salmon and wearing a yellow rain slicker.

That cover appeared during one of Seattle's boom years (1996) when hundreds were moving here to work for Microsoft. Kinsley wasn't just another photogenic poster child, he had been hired to cyberedit Microsoft's Slate magazine.

That was several economic cycles ago. Since then, Seattle has experienced boom and bust, bust and boom and now we're in boom times again. The Seattle Times recently reported that Seattle is now the fastest growing big city in the nation. In a single year (2016), Seattle acquired 2,100 new residents, averaging more than 57 newbies per day and bringing the city's population to 704,352.

Given this overheated population growth, it's small wonder that, despite a forest of construction cranes, we have been unable to keep pace with housing demands nor to stem the wave of rising rents.

The city has been laboring to maximize housing supply—both market-rate and low-income housing—by encouraging development through increased density. But the task of increasing density throughout the city has been fraught with controversy.

Early in his term, Mayor Ed Murray impaneled a closed-door committee of developers (both for-profit and non-profit providers), as well as representatives of labor and business and a few randomly-chosen renters and homeowners. Their assignment: devise a grand plan. What the committee proposed is now being sold to citizens as HALA, Housing Affordability and Livability Agenda.

Key to HALA's Grand Plan is a bargain that, in exchange for greater heights, housing developers must build and set-aside a certain percentage of affordable units, either that or make payments for that purpose. Commercial developers also must contribute. The goal of MHA (Mandatory Housing Affordability) is to produce 50,000 total new housing units in the next ten years, with 20,000 of the units available to lower-income households.

Implementation of the grand plan depends on making more land available for multi-family and high-rise housing units. Within its city limits, Seattle doesn't have much vacant buildable land. That means that increased density will require considerable upzoning—allowing more height and density within the city.

Upzoning within urban villages and centers has received some tacit approval. However, massive changes in zoning and loosening of regulations has encountered pushback. Of particular concern to many residents is the still undecided notion of permitting duplexes and triplexes throughout single-family neighborhoods.

To tell people who presently live here that they must make room for newcomers through significant changes in their communities is not without risk. Nor are the harsh words that have been uttered asserting that homeowners—characterized as NIMBYs (Not in my Backyard)—are selfish race-focused grouches.

The Seattle Office of Planning and Community Development has been holding outreach meetings to explain HALA implementation. Selling of the program sometimes has the unfortunate aura of group-think. Are the meetings meant to be a one-way dialogue? Or are they an opportunity for residents to provide belated input?

Some have been calling for a pause in Seattle's massive rezoning. Of special concern are opposing goals. On one hand, fliers announce that "no zoning changes are proposed in single family areas outside of Urban Villages." On the other hand, the fliers also state that zoning changes will "expand Urban Villages to reflect a 10-minute walk from very good transit service." In other words, single-family zones likely will be trimmed, carved up, making the "no change" rule meaningless at best.

Seattle is holding an election for two at-large council members and a mayor this year. There are many questions about the HALA program that should be—must be—asked of those who are seeking office. This is an opportunity for voters to assess Seattle's 10-year program, which presently seeks to triple the city's affordable housing production.

One of the largest concerns is maintaining the character of Seattle's unique neighborhoods. To turn every neighborhood into another South Lake Union would defeat the goal of keeping Seattle an attractive place to live for residents and anticipated newcomers alike. To do otherwise would destroy the city's very desirability for those who are swimming to Seattle as well as for those of us presently in the swim.

Funny nose glasses

It was intended as a simple commercial promoting a baseball giveaway—in which 30,000 Mariners' baseball fans would each receive a free vinyl M's jacket when they came through the turnstiles on August 23rd, 1981.

The commercial was written and produced by the person writing this column. At the time, I was a freshly-minted (for breath purposes) producer for KING TV, the Mariners' broadcast station of the early '80's (carrying a measly 15 games out of 162.)

I thought it would be funny to feature an actual Mariner player as the spokesman—one who starts out doing a straightforward sales job—but is misinformed about what is actually being promoted. The premise had the player pitching a (non-existent) "Funny Nose Glasses Night"—rather than the actual "Jacket Night" promotion. Laughs would hopefully ensue.

I had decided upon funny nose glasses as the ideal bogus promotional item because the very notion seemed absurd. The usual giveaway items were—and are—always associated with the game of baseball itself: Jackets, bats, caps, etc. They are traditional components of the American pastime.

But funny nose glasses are...well...funny—in an almost universally accepted way that has nothing to do with baseball. Also known as "Groucho" glasses, they look a lot like the makeup style the most famous Marx brother was known for. Even a humorless college professor could generate student smiles by donning a pair. (In fact, many college professors already look like they're wearing them.)

Recently, in a simple Google search—not possible in 1981—I discovered a scholarly psychology article entitled, "The Effect of Groucho Marx Glasses on Depression." Clearly, if such apparel has the benefit of bringing cheer to unhappy people, the same kind of glasses could certainly provide solace to baseball fans of a struggling team. And the Mariners certainly were in the early 1980's.

The player chosen for the assignment was a dandy outfielder named Tom Paciorek. He played 18 seasons all told—and the best of them were with the Mariners. One year, he finished second in batting average in the American League.

Paciorek was chosen for the jacket night commercial for two reasons: One, he was a quick study at memorizing copy—and two, he was the only player that would agree to do it.

The Mariners' marketing people expected me to put together a commercial that would be quick, slick and professional-looking. They settled for just quick.

Still, the estimable Paciorek knocked the spot out in a couple of takes—as I served as director and off-camera announcer. Here it is—in all its low-definition glory:

<https://youtu.be/Hr7Ji7PBOXY>

When game night rolled around—at least according to team lore—people streaming into the Kingdome were dismayed when they were handed jackets. "We thought we were getting funny nose glasses instead," many reportedly said. (Why exactly they were disappointed is unclear. After all, funny nose glasses do a lousy job of keeping a person dry in a rain storm.)

But the Mariners' marketing department heard so much noise about it that they made a decision: "Let's actually have a "Funny Nose Glasses Night" next season."

And so they did.

It happened May 8th, 1982—designed to coincide with the one year anniversary of the night that the same Tom Paciorek hit the first of his two consecutive ninth-inning, game-winning homers against the Yankees.

A crowd of 36,716 showed up for "Funny Nose Glasses Night"—the fourth largest turnout of the season—and a bigger crowd than came for an actual big deal baseball milestone two days earlier: Gaylord Perry's 300th career win. (He later wound up in the Hall of Fame.)

The Mariners' manager at the time, Rene Lachemann—even got into the act by wearing a pair of the goofy glasses to homeplate for the traditional lineup exchange. Less well remembered: The M's lost to the Yankees that night, 9-4.

All these years later—this week in fact—the Mariners are again staging a "Funny Nose Glasses Night." But there will only be 5,000 pairs given away this time—so the promotion could inadvertently turn into the first ever "Crying Kids Who Missed Out—And Their Parents Are Not Happy About It...Night."

Footnote: Even though he was as responsible as anyone for that very first "Funny Nose Glasses Night", Tom Paciorek wasn't around to be a part of it. By then, he'd been traded to the Chicago White Sox. But that turned out just fine for him—because today he is a Chisox baseball broadcaster.

And speaking of the Windy City, I need to contact someone at the Mariners again—about my idea for "Whoopie Cushion Night."

Jerald R. Blomgren died Wednesday, May 24, 2017, in Salem, Oregon – his home for more than 30 years – at age 68. He was born in Pendleton, Oregon, on September 6, 1948. He was the son of Ernest and Florence Blomgren. The Blomgren family moved to Seattle when Jerry was a young boy, and he grew up with his two brothers David and Ray and his sister Janis in Normandy Park. The family moved to the Chicago area when Jerry was 14. He graduated from Deerfield High School in 1966 before heading west, where he graduated from Yakima Valley Community College. Jerry served in the U.S. Army as a communications specialist, including a year in Vietnam in 1970. He worked at the Eastern Oregon Hospital and Training Center in Pendleton for many years before moving to Salem, where he was an occupational therapist at Fairview Training Center and then at a group home. He retired in 2015, after assisting the mentally and physically challenged for more than 40 years. Jerry was an avid reader. His home is filled with books of every interest, from astronomy to historical fiction to sports. He was a constant patron of the Salem Public Library. He loved the Chicago Cubs, and his family is grateful the Cubbies ended their 108-year drought while he was alive to enjoy it. He is survived by siblings David Blomgren, Janis Lee, Ray Blomgren, Karen

Davis and Larry Wahl. A family memorial service will be held this summer in Seattle. Jerry's ashes will find a final resting place in Puget Sound. Assisting the family is Virgil T. Golden Funeral Service of Salem, OR. Published in Westside Seattle, June 9, 2017.

Ken Rogers wants port seat

Ken Rogers is announcing he will run for Position Four on the Port of Seattle Commission. With an aviation industry career spanning three decades, Rogers is a uniquely experienced candidate. He would be the first port commissioner with an extensive background in international aviation and passenger airline transportation.

"I am running for Port Commission because I want to make a contribution to my community using the experience I've gained over the past 30 years in aviation," says Rogers. "Nearly eighty percent of the port's total revenue is related to aviation, and yet none of the current commissioners has experience in the aviation industry. I bring an understanding of aviation safety and security, as well as airline operations, labor relations and international business economics."

Rogers is a former airline pilot and labor leader who held leadership positions in the Air Line Pilots Association (ALPA) throughout his flying career. For ten years, he served on the Board of Directors of one of the world's largest passenger airlines.

Not quite spent

being less At Large in Ballard and more...at large. Right away some ideas started to bubble up in me, ones that had seemed drowned in weekly deadlines and the changes in my life since my first column back in 2007. The mystery of a garden growing in a vacant commercial lot near the Ballard Goodwill, my mother's encounter with Garrison Keillor.

Part of the problem is that lately I've just wanted to garden my way out of worrying about my take on a constant erosion of what constitutes democracy, and it's been hard to find positive story material beyond my happy tomato plants. Where are the sea lions this year? Why aren't they singing from the buoy? Plus I get depressed in June. It's so light all the time, especially when there are too many sunny days in a row.

After saying goodbye to Ken Robinson, I noticed an alert on my computer about a fire in a single-family residence in Ballard. Probably because of that west wind I hadn't heard the sirens. I sent a text to News Reporter Shane Harms (did we have computers or texting ten years ago? We didn't have Shane Harms yet, but at least he'd been born). He asked if I was nearby. Nearby, and familiar with the house, an absolute beauty (1911, Hipped Roof, Historic Category 1) from the Mapping Historic Ballard project.

So 10 minutes after announcing my summer sabbatical I was next to Captain Roddick as she set down her chain saw "Minimal damage," she said upon inquiry. "Well, not minimal," she amended. "Mostly the wood porch and back wall. We did have to cut into the roof." The cause was charcoal briquettes from the previous evening left on or near the back porch, "Not quite spent. You wouldn't believe how often this happens."

"So not spontaneous combustion," I confirmed with Battalion Chief J.M. Havner, Fire Station 18. Part of the reason I'd heeded my fire engine-chasing instincts was the recent outbreak of nearby fires due to spontaneous combustion, including one that started in a plant container.

"Not this one," Havner said, "It's barbecue season. Think, safety, safety, safety. Let everyone know to be careful."

So I did what I needed to do. Got back to my laptop by the open door and wrote this column. Because I'm not quite spent either. I may not be on these print pages, or the "front page" of the website consistently for a while, but I'm not going anywhere. So be careful.

"I need to take a break," I told Ken Robinson, my nominal boss, Co-Publisher and General Manager of what will always be the Ballard News-Tribune to me. "I've been doing this for 10 years."

Ten minutes later I was at the scene of house fire in the neighborhood, proving several things at once. The daughter of a fire engine chaser cannot change, and my father's journalist blood still pumps in my veins. At the corner of 28th N.W. and N.W. 58th the assemblage of Seattle Fire Department responders were putting away ladders and chainsaws, hoses still snaking through the intersection.

Lately I've been putting more thought into whether to keep writing this column than into writing one. Other than a title, I was considering "Swan Song, or Never Say Never." I have so many other deadlines that the list of possible columns, wonderful suggestions from all sorts of people, seemed daunting versus enticing. But they are juicy; a retired Peace Corps woman who's involved with a Vietnamese orphanage, the Jazz Vocal teacher, the graduating UW Design students who are going to activate the NW surplus substations later in the month...

I confessed to Ken I feel less attached to the print edition now that each of its formerly distinct papers no longer has its own logo. Plus less feedback proffered to me in the produce section at Ballard Market. He let me whine for a bit, talked me up, talked me down, and then we agreed on a summer sabbatical. But especially given that it's summer we agreed to leave the door open, just the way that my front door is now wide open to the flies and a westerly afternoon breeze right now. "If there's something that lights you up and you need to write about this summer, just let me know," he said.

Then we talked about my returning next fall, after my full-time summer job in Madrona is over and I've had that break. We discussed Congratulations!

To all the teachers, coaches, businesses, student-athletes and parents in the Highline District and Highline Schools Foundation Scholar-Athlete program who celebrate another successful year of fundraising. Westside Seattle salutes each participant. Thanks for a job well done.
